The Preacher's Post – Darin Kennedy

This week was a great celebration of food and joy as Thursday was the 50th anniversary of the release of The Beatles, otherwise known as The White Album. Oh yeah, it was also Thanksgiving.

The year 1968 was a troubled year. MLK was killed in April, and Robert Kennedy in June. The Olympics in Mexico City were characterized by massive student riots and remembered for the Black Power salute of two competitors. Some of the greatest violence took place in Vietnam, and some of the most violent Vietnam protests took place in America and England. The Soviet Union continued to expand, and the Cold War intensified. Certainly, it was not all gloomy with events like the first heart transplant and the passage of the Civil Rights Act, but it was troubled.

In 1968, it was interesting to hear from a song entitled “Revolution 1,” “Don't you know it's gonna be/All right, all right, all right.” People on the right thought The Beatles were advocating revolution. People on the left listened to the lyrics and felt betrayed, that The Beatles were belittling their work for change. I guess great art is often known as much by how many people it offends as by how much praise it garners. The point from The Beatles seemed to be that it is not “the constitution” or “the institution” that needs change, but “You better free your mind instead.”

The Beatles did not have a Christian foundation. Their songs for that year were mainly written during a meditation retreat in India under the tutelage of a yogi. But it is true that the only way “to change the world” is “to change your head.” We Christians know that the only way for significant inner change, and outer change in turn, is by the Holy Spirit of God, an intrusion of God into our fallen lives, so that the heart might be rescued from selfish desires and raised to think on “things above.”

Oh, that much of our resources and energy might be turned from the worldly pursuits and temporary fixes, by which we seek improvement, to the cultivation of the inner person, of the eternal soul! That change of focus will happen when we trust that God will provide for the outer person: “Seek first his kingdom and his righteousness, and all these things will be given to you as well” (Matthew 6:33). When we stop scrapping and arguing because of anxiety and defensive posturing, we are free to give ourselves to peace, love, and joy.
